Dr. Breckinridge's Letter and the Louisville Journal.

The Journal delivers itself of a column of strictures upon an article in this paper upon the exceedingly eloquent and able letter of Dr. Breckinridge, but has not one word to say in defense of its own party. The breath is knocked out of its body, and, as it lies prostrate, can only reproach us for our resistance, but cannot say a word to the terrible assailant himself. The discretion of the Journal is perfect; it does not wish to provoke the Rev. Dr. to another onslaught, and remains as dumb as Falstaff before the live Percy, and only shows any signs of life, in a side issue, with one whom it fancies to be weak in the knees. The ridiculous attitude of a great political newspaper permitting any one to ride over its party rough shod; scolding its pretended principles with the most sovereign contempt, and not having one word for its defense, is precisely the attitude of the Journal towards Dr. Breckinridge; instead of aiding in a common defense against this Goliath, that aims at a universal destruction, it joins itself to what it thinks the stronger party, to aid in a victory that can do itself no good, (for its party is prostrate by its own confession) and the result can only be a gratification of its malice in pulling the Democratic party in the same slough with itself. But we hold no community with the Journal in this misfortune; and although the blows are terrible, even to the overwhelming of our opponents, we are safe upon that rock of truth that even the strong arm of this giant cannot pull down. If we are feeble in ourselves, we are strong in a strength not our own, and have one "smooth stone" from that brook of truth, which will enable us to prevail against the "flesh and the devil."

The Journal is skillful in every species of badinage, but shows an utter ignorance of the first principles of dialectics; among all metaphysicians, and even such low chop-logic reasoners as lawyers, certain facts must be granted before you can proceed with any sort of argument; and when you get to disputing about primary facts, you preclude every thing like argumentation, and the contest resolves itself into mere assertion and denial. If we grant Dr. Breckinridge's primary facts or hypothesis, that the Democratic party is a disunion party, we place ourselves in precisely the attitude of our defeated and disgraced opponents; but we denied this assertion, and still deny it, and will continue to do so, till we have a higher authority than any cited by the Journal shall proclaim the fact. We place ourselves upon the Cincinnati Democratic platform, and hold that as the true and only Democratic creed, and this can only be amended or repealed, but by the same high authority that enacted it. As a State Legislature or Governor cannot amend a law of Congress, so no State Democratic Convention nor statesman, high or low, has any right or binding authority over the great proclamation made at Cincinnati; this can only be affected by the powers that are to assemble in Charleston. As the Cincinnati platform does not recognize, even as a "remote contingency, the dissolution of the union as a remedy for existing evils," so we had a right to repel the charge made by Dr. Breckinridge, and deny his premise. If we permit Dr. B. to choose our ground for us, it is more than probable he can strike us as dumb as he has done the Journal; but we will continue to do battle, as long as we have an arm to strike for the integrity of the Democratic party, and that integrity consists in a perfect loyalty to the Union of these States.

We showed that nationality was the very essence of the Democratic creed—that it was what lawyers call the very gist of the subject; and this is precisely the strength it has over the miserable factions that are warring for its destruction, and coupled with which destruction, we believe, is the destruction of the government. If the Journal and its co-factionists could only oust our party from this stronghold, they are in hopes of driving us out to sea, as they themselves are, and they care not what hidden calamity awaits the country. But it is precisely upon this sure anchor that the Democratic party is safely riding—this undisturbed integrity of the Union, this perfect equality of the States, yet union into our federal brotherhood is as essential an article of Democratic belief as the Divinity of Christ is to Dr. Breckinridge's theology, and can be expunged from it with as little injury to the system in the one case as in the other. Nor do we use this comparison as wanting in reverence, in any sense, to that religion which has done more for the civilization of mankind than all others, and which we verily believe qualified our ancestors for building up this marvelous government that is our heritage; and the more closely we adhere to its precepts, the more we will value the union of these States, and the longer will that Union be perpetuated.

The factiousness of the Journal is as rueful as that of the Knight of Salamanca, who laughed at the plight of poor Sancho, upon whom he had vomited, yet himself bore the most serious evidences of the terrible onset of the shepherds, and whom Cervantes describes as wearing a most rueful and disfiguring smile.

If our defense of our party is "dialectical bathos," it is far more than the Journal has attempted for its followers; for ours was certainly an attempt, and when a man is assailed, though his strength may not be sufficient to repel the assailant, every motive of honor requires him to resent the assault, and bear the consequences, be they what they may. This is certainly a more honorable course than that pursued by the Journal, which attempts to ride over us on the back of this levitation, regardless of the scathing itself has received.

This is hardly chivalrous in any sense, and especially when it believed we had more than we could defend ourselves from. But we do not regard our party as so utterly vanquished as to have no strength for reply; not that we pretend to mental or rhetorical ability to cope, ceteris paribus, with this doughty doctor, who stalks through Church and State like some intellectual hobgoblin, to the infinite terror of all political and especially ecclesiastical gain-sayers, and in this instance to the speechless horror of the Journal editor. We had rather be crushed in a manly resistance, than to deserve to be spit upon for a sycophantic imbecility. But occupying as we do such a vantage ground, we utter our protest against his assumption with all the vigor of our feeble lungs can give utterance to. We have offered defiance at least, and this is more respectable than to come out on the stronger side and cry "catch thief," as if we had been no party to this terrible impeachment; and we have preserved our self-respect, and although we may be worsted, in the opinion of that of some other men. But the position of our Louisville cotemporary is not only inglorious but pitiable; for it not only kisses the hand that administered the castigation, but endeavors to conciliate the thunder "lest a worse come upon it," with all manner of bombastic compliments.

We waive the compliments to our extensive knowledge, and deny, most emphatically, that it comprehends all the Journal gives us credit for; this is "damning us with faint praise" in a manner perfectly familiar to it, but which we relish less than the tooth of its ridicule. We did all we set out to do; and as our pretensions were not much, yet believe our success was commensurate with our undertaking, and in the face of the storm of ridicule attempted to be cast upon us, we still deny that the "Democratic party contemplates a dissolution of the Union, as a remedy for existing evils."

SENATOR RUST'S SPEECH.—We commend to our readers the speech of this gentleman on the resolution to appropriate $10,000 to the completion of the Clay Monument. The sentiments contained in it must meet with a hearty response in the bosom of every reader, and the eloquent terms in which these sentiments are conveyed, must strike all with admiration. It was listened to with the marked respect and attention which characterizes the Senate whenever this gentleman obtains the floor. The effect of the oration was peculiarly striking, and the whole speech told, to the satisfaction of the orator no doubt, for the resolution passed unanimously.

He also keeps on hand all kinds of gentlemen's furnishing goods—shirts, cravats, suspenders, gloves, &c., which he sells as cheap as any house in the city. The Ball Again.

Alas! alas for human hopes—imagine our disappointment, on opening the Yeoman on Saturday, to see some of our most carefully prepared notices of some of the most exquisite belles and beauties, not in their proper places, but gone, and utterly left out. We rushed in indignation to the printer, who showed us the manuscript as it came into his hands, and protested his innocence of any mutilation—it must have been done by some rival, who, jealous of our good understanding with the ladies, has invaded our sanctum and perpetrated this wrong. But such business shall not avail him. We will endeavor to repair it; but, alas! it is with little hopes of doing any justice to the subject. The printer is not entirely excusable, for he has made some egregious typographical errors, such, for instance in the case of Miss L. S., of Frankfort, making us represent her as Hadeo; not as the lovely Linda, that she was.

A faultless and exquisite personification of Helen Mars was the lovely Miss E. W. of Louisville. We cannot hope to give our readers a correct portrait, but we bear it "where moth and rust cannot corrupt" it, and where it is not likely to fade away.

Miss S. B., of Anderson, was the trump card of the evening, and we confess we were tempted to disregard our Presbyterian raising, which forbids us to look upon a pack of cards, and never in our life were we so willing to engage ourselves to a "whist club" as this one.

Miss S., of Scott, was a "Star of the Evening," which shone with undiminished splendor amidst all the brightness of that constellation, and was as conspicuous as Venus among the lesser lights of the heavens, when it is her turn to be the evening star.

Mrs. W., of Alabama, was a bright and particular banner that has waved in many a brilliant assembly, and may it long continue to wave, and may her posterity never witness it furled in sorrow or gloom.

SCHOOL FOR FEEBLE-MINDED CHILDREN.

The passage of the bill for the establishment of an institution for feeble-minded children, in the House of Representatives, is a matter of sincere congratulation. There is, we hope, no doubt of its passage in the Senate. The establishment of such a school is at once demanded by philanthropy and the pecuniary interest of the Commonwealth. Thousands of dollars are now annually wasted in putting a little bread and meat into the mouths, and in barely clothing the nakedness of these unfortunate specimens of humanity, which, if appropriated to the establishment and sustentation of a school for their improvement, would restore many of them to the bosom of their families, useful members, in their degree, of society. Our noble Commonwealth has made provision for every other class of sufferers; shall she not now extend her parental and fostering hand to this, the most afflicted of all? Into how many families in the State would the establishment of such a school carry gladness and joyousness, now darkened by the presence of one or more of these afflicted children.

TO LAWYERS.—Our facilities for job printing are equal to any office in the West, and we are prepared to do all kinds of job work at the shortest notice. Lawyers' briefs, legal cards, blanks, &c., printed in the neatest styles and at prices as low as they can be done anywhere.

Washington Items.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—A report has prevailed for several days that Postmaster General Holt contemplates resigning his position. This originated in an understood difference between himself and the other members of the Cabinet, respecting an interpretation of the law relative to the curtailment of the mail service, but it is understood that the conflicting views have been reconciled.

The Post-office Department has been notified by Mr. Morgan, contractor for carrying the mails between New Orleans and Fern Griz, that he has withdrawn the steamer Tennessee, and cannot carry the mails any longer for the post-office. The service will therefore have to be performed by sailing vessels. The Treasury balance is under eight millions of dollars, including accounts subject to draft, and received for Mint service, upon which advances are made by deposits of gold dust for coinage; half this sum is intended to meet the Post-office deficiency due last July, whenever Congress shall pass an appropriation bill, and the rest is required for the six months ending December 31.

Richard Realf, who reached Washington on Thursday night, with the door-keeper, Jones, of the Senate, was this morning examined by the Harper's Ferry special committee. He is reported as highly educated.

Arrangements have been made for executing the Senate and Executive printing at Rives' Globe office.

THE STATUE OF HENRY CLAY.—The New Orleans Crescent of Tuesday, says:

This long awaited work has arrived and been landed from ship in fine order. When in its place in Canal street, it will form one of the most striking and agreeable features of the city. We have not seen it, but learn that the enterprise and patriotism of the Clay Monument Association is amply rewarded by the character of the work, which is a truthful semblance of the form and features of the illustrious man whom it represents. The statue will be erected on the 12th of April next, the anniversary of Henry Clay's birthday, and we suggest that it would be a proper and graceful tribute to the memory of the great man, besides a just country to the Association, for the city to take charge of the inaugural ceremonies, and carry them through on a befitting scale of handsome liberality and imposing arrangement.

Below we give the remarks of Senators Rust and Walker upon the bill appropriating $10,000 to the Clay Monument Association:

Remarks of Senators Rust and Walker upon the Clay Monument Appropriation Bill.

MR. RUST said:
MR. SPEAKER: Until within a few moments since, I had no idea of addressing the Senate upon the subject of the preamble and resolution at present under consideration; nor do I wish to incur the censure of an unnecessary consumption of the time of this body, but merely acted upon my sincere desire that the question now before us may meet with an affirmative response from every Senator on this floor; and that there be no dissenting voice against a resolution which has for its object the completion of a monument to the memory of one who must ever stand the proud "land mark of his country's genius," and occupy a high and elevated position in the galaxy of intellectual greatness.

The offering we propose to make to the memory of HENRY CLAY, the gifted orator, patriot, and statesman of Kentucky, should be the joint work of all who represent Kentucky in this Hall of Legislation. It is due to us—it is due to him.

It is true that the party now in the majority on this floor differed with him in days long past, but they differed not so much upon principles as they did upon questions relating alone to the administrative policy of the government. Sir, I ever held that, so far as principles were concerned, there was but one great point of difference between Mr. Clay and the Democratic party—and that grew out of a controversy as to what was the proper construction of the Federal Constitution—we contending that the Constitution should be strictly construed, he, that a more liberal construction should be given to that instrument. Upon that difference of opinion as to principle arose the various measures which, from time to time, divided the two great political parties of that day.

Mr. Speaker, I behold around me those who opposed Mr. Clay in many a hard fought political struggle. The number is fewer of those who approved of the last acts which crowned his illustrious and glorious public career. And yet, there is no one to be found, in a country numbering over thirty millions of free people, to withhold from him that admiration and reverence due only to the greatest and best of men.

Sir, the subject embraced in this preamble and resolution is far above all party considerations. It is for us to say whether or not this testimonial to the memory of the distinguished dead, is the voice and sentiment of the whole American people; it is for us to decide whether or not we will to-day join with them in their testimony to the greatness of HENRY CLAY.

I have said there were those in this Hall who differed with Mr. Clay in many of his political views and opinions. Sir, it was an honest difference of opinion—a difference as to the administration of a government, based upon a written Constitution, which we all reverence, and to the preservation of which the lives, the fortunes, and the sacred honor of all are equally pledged. Oh! that his majestic form could reappear, and his eloquent voice once more be heard in the national councils of our country, where differences of a more fearful character now divide and distract us. But, sir, he is gone—and well may we exclaim, in the language of the poet:

"A mighty spirit is eclipsed—A Power Hath passed from day to darkness—whose hour Of light no likeness is beguiled—no name, Focus at once of all the rays of fame."

Sir, I again express my sincere desire that the vote now about to be taken may be unanimous.

MR. WALKER said:
MR. SPEAKER: I arise in this Chamber, not for the purpose of pronouncing an eulogium at length upon Henry Clay, the orator, patriot, statesman. He needs none.

His name is interwoven with the institutions of his country in its most delicate windings, and shines forth prominently upon the brightest pages of its history. It is true, that while many dissenters from his political teachings, yet they admired and loved the man.

While the popular branch of this assembly is controlled largely by the Democratic party, differing with him politically, we see that unhesitatingly, almost with a single voice, they attest their appreciation of him by voting this appropriation. He rests beneath the sod of Ashland, on Kentucky soil, which he has made world-wide reputation as being the place that could most appropriately claim him.

But truly can it be said that his country, the union, and the whole Union, for which he labored, claimed him; and, Mr. Speaker, is not the claim well founded?

In the most troublous times of her history, has not always his stentorian voice been heard rallying his countrymen to her preservation; and that, too, with marked effect? Need I refer to periods when he raised himself above party, as the dark clouds of dissension gathered about the harp whose chords seemed attuned by the winds of Heaven, and caused it to vibrate from centre to circumference, bidding hope, undying hope, to endure around the souls of men more closely giving more pleasant emotions to the patriot's heart, and strength to his nerves, to again rally to her safety. No, sir, these efforts of his are written upon the history of his country, and are embalmed in the hearts of his countrymen.

Would that my lips were touched with the fire of the inspired seer of old, in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," that I might faintly describe the scenes of his life, in the country of his birth, in the diadem of American liberty, in the company of her brilliant jewels, he shines forth one of, if not her brightest ornament; and with, with augmented brilliancy, while the eagle is perched with the stars and stripes upon Columbia's soil and flutters in freedom over this favored land.

Sir, I shall vote for the resolution.

LAW SCHOOL

OF HARVARD COLLEGE.

The Instruction in this School are:

HON. JOEL PARKER, LL. D., Royal Professor.

HON. THEOPHILUS PARSONS, LL. D., Dane Professor.

HON. EMORY WASHBURN, LL. D., University Professor.

THE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION embraces the several branches of the Common Law, and the Equity, Admiralty, Commercial, International, and Constitutional Law; and the Jurisprudence of the United States. The Law Library consists of about 15,000 volumes, and new works appear from time to time, and every effort is made to render it complete.

Instruction is given by oral lectures and expositions (and by recitations and examinations in connection with them) of which there are ten every week. A moot Court is held in each week, at which a cause previously given out is argued by students, and an opinion delivered by the Presiding Instructor. Rooms and other facilities are provided for Club Courts; and an Assembly is held weekly, for practice in debate, and for acquiring a knowledge of parliamentary law and proceedings.

Students may enter the School in any stage of their professional studies, or undertake the full course, and the commencement of either term, or in the middle or other part of the term.

They are at liberty to select what studies they will pursue, according to their view of their own wants and attainments.

The academic year, which commences on Thursday six weeks after the third Wednesday in July, is divided into two terms of twenty weeks each, with a vacation of six weeks at the end of each term. During the winter vacation the Library is open, warmed, and lighted, for the use of the members of the School.

The Exercises of the Spring Term will commence on MONDAY, March 5th; those of the Autumn Term, on MONDAY, September 3d, 1860.
